

Changemaking and Community Research Strategist

Cordelia Snowdon-Lawley

Cordelia (she/her) is currently Changemaking and Community Research Strategist at the Institute for Community Prosperity at Mount Royal University. Her work at the Institute spans multiple projects including strategic program design and delivery, social marketing and public communications, support for changemaking-focused learning programs and applied community-partnered research projects. She is responsible for mentorship and supervision of student fellows to help support their development as changemakers, planning and advancing the Institute's communication strategies, materials, and branding, and supporting in researching, and writing Institute publications.

In her various roles, Cordelia seeks to enact system-level structural change by examining how to make policies work more efficiently for the people they serve and advocating for improving the accessibility of resources, services, and spaces. Her background experience is a former Catamount Fellow (2019-2020 cohort), leading academic representation through the students' association, and her education is in Policy Studies and Social Work.